Dear 5.1.2e

Apart from the fact that the student has to write a new thesis because 5.1.2e committed fraud, there is in the opinion of the Board of Examiners no reason to treat 5.1.2e differently than other students. So, if the other students have the possibility to write a thesis in one semester (follow the 5.1.2e timeline, 5.1.2e should have that possibility as well.

Best regards, on behalf of the Board of Examiners,

5.1.2e

Dear colleagues,

Pursuant to your decision, the student below committed plagiarism/fraud when writing their thesis. Accordingly, they need to write a new thesis on a new topic and resubmit it in the next academic year. However, I am not sure whether the rules expressly say that the new process shall last 1 academic year or it could be 1 semester only, as requested by the student.

I consider the case serious enough to require 1 extra year but I look forward to your advice based on the applicable regulations.

With best regards,

5.1.2e

Dear 5.1.2e

I hope this message finds you well.

I'm very sorry to trouble you again and truly appreciate your patience and support.

I have recently received an email from 5.1.2e, who kindly suggested that I may write my thesis in 5.1.2e. I understand this could mean following the 5.1.2e timeline, but I would be most grateful if you could confirm whether my understanding is correct.

At the same time, I am currently considering to write a new thesis outline on a different topic. If I do decide to take this direction, I was wondering whether it would be necessary—or perhaps advisable—to work with a different supervisor who has expertise in the new area.

In addition, I would like to mention that I previously took the course 5.1.2e but unfortunately did not pass. I sincerely hope to retake the course 5.1.2e. If it is at all possible, I would be deeply grateful to know whether I might be allowed to complete the course remotely and submit the final paper online.

Thank you very much for your time and kind consideration. I truly appreciate your guidance, and I am looking forward to your reply.

Best regards,

5.1.2e
